

Shoreline survey available

The City of South Padre Island Shoreline Department and HDR Engineering invites the community to take a short survey regarding the Island's shoreline. The survey will be available until Wednesday, April 18. Click HERE to take the survey.

Within one week of the survey being available, the City has already received over fifty requests for meetings with HDR Consultants. In addition to the phenomenal reception of the survey, the City of South Padre Island's Shoreline Master Plan has stepped into the spotlight. The Gulf of Mexico Alliance program that chose to fund the plan was established to help "Gulf of Mexico coastal communities enhance their overall resilience to future hazards using a systematic and integrated approach leading to standard methods to engage communities."

This project is 1 of 10 that were funded in the Gulf States and has been selected as 1 of 7 that will be featured at the Gulf Communities Projects Café at the Climate and Resilience Community of Practice Meeting to be held in Port Aransas. Shoreline Director Brandon Hill will be speaking on the City's Master Plan efforts as inspiration to other gulf communities.

The Master Plan will also be the subject of a documentary that is focused on highlighting the GOMA funded efforts. A lab based out of Dauphin Island, Alabama is creating a documentary on Coastal Resilience best practices and has selected SPI as one of their subjects. Their film crew will be arriving early May in order to hold interviews and film for the feature.
